

PICTURE TO REMEMBER

ABOUT THIS PICTURE:

There is a special drama behind this picture by Photographer Suzanne Szasz. When it was taken, the father of the two little girls, Dr. Stephen Borsody, was an official in the Washington Legation of the Hungarian Government. The children are shown waiting at the Union Station to greet a high Hungarian official.

Not long after, the communist coup d'état occurred in Hungary. Dr. Borsody resigned his post and sought asylum in the U.S. Today Dr. Borsody is a professor at an eastern college. His daughters, Eva and Hanna, are in school. The entire family has made a successful adjustment to American life.

WAITING

by Joseph Auslander

Alas, in other lands than ours
Your small fists, clutching wilted flowers,
Would beat on Iron Curtain towers!

Thank God that you can laugh and live
Among us; that free hearts can give
Hope to the homeless fugitive.

1951

BORSODY Stephen

BARBODY 5/14

Week

Z I N E

WASHINGTON, D. C.

MAGAZINE SECTION • FEBRUARY 4 1951

TALLCHIEF (TOP) AND SISTER MARJORIE. SEE PAGE 16

THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY Page 7