

Don't Tell Zsa Zsa She's Dumb

George Said That And She Made Him Eat Words

By James Bacon

HOLLYWOOD.

Zsa Zsa Gabor today is one of the hottest movie properties in town. And it all happened in four months—and in the most unusual way yet.

Her husband, George Sanders, told her she was too dumb for television. Even such a notorious woman-belittler as Sanders now wishes he had never said that.

Zsa Zsa went on television on a local CBS panel show and made history. The thrice-married Hungarian beauty stole the show, called "Bachelor's Haven." The show pits two males against two females with males supposed to predominate.

But with the gorgeous Zsa Zsa as a regular panelist, upholding the woman's view, just the opposite has happened.

Sample: One woman wrote in and asked what to do with a husband who wanted to travel all the time. Zsa Zsa answered: "Shoot him in the leg." A few days later—by coincidence, it is hoped—the police blotter here carried such a case.

Life Gets Ecstatic.

Mervyn Leroy saw her on the show and signed her for a picture at MGM, "Lovely to Look At." Twentieth Century-Fox did likewise, starring her in "We're Not Married." She signed for two more pictures at MGM and has had to turn two other offers down. Life magazine ran her face on its cover and wrote of her that she is the only woman in Hollywood whose brain exudes sex appeal.

Sanders, who thought he had married a social figure and not an actress, almost lost her. The two fought and split up but, as of now, Zsa Zsa reports she and George are back together again very much in love. In fact, she says that George has told friends —and her—that he loves her as much as it is possible for him to love anybody. And that is quite an admission for this town's most articulate woman hater.

Poise Once Shaken.

Her poise has only been shattered once on the television show and that was recently when some one wrote for advice on switching husbands. Spike Jones, a guest panelist, quipped:

"Let Zsa Zsa answer that one. She's switched more husbands than any one else on the show."

It hurt Zsa Zsa and she almost cried in a million or more living rooms. She later forgave Jones and admitted that she might have hurt him when she confessed that she was a music lover but had never heard of him.

"In fact," she confessed, "I asked when I heard his name on the program 'What is a Spike Jones?'"

"I love Beethoven, Bach and even Vaughan, Monroe, but I honestly had never heard any of Spike Jones' music."
