N.Y. Tribune, 1852 Apr. 27
(Also in Albany my Eve Journal same day)

"Capt. G. who accompanied K. to the Arsenal and who was a soldier under Stein in the last struggle, took one of the muskets from its resting place, and bearing it as do soldiers when about to make a charge, said to the writer:

'Why did you bring me here? - I think so much, but once more I will do so - and, as he spoke - he moved forward several steps with an energy ^{which} ~~that~~ showed that ~~he~~ he covets an opportunity once more to meet his country's oppressors on the field of battle, though, as in the last struggle, the proportion may be 20,000 oppressors to 5000 oppressed.'
