

1956

Pygmies and Pal

Photographer-adventurer Robert Halmi of New York never realized what a big man he is until he spent a week with the Walezi pygmy tribe in the Belgian Congo. Usually shy and furtive, the pygmies considered Halmi a sort of good-luck charm. They let him go with them on hunts, in which each pygmy carries a vine net to snare game driven by their women, who act as beaters.

Metro Group Photo

See in "Habsburgs" vol.
"Windischgrätz"

HALMI
Robert

