

Pulaski

Lundin, Leonard: Codrigit of the Revolution, The War for Indep. in N. J.
Princeton Univ. Press 1940

P.386

"The people of Trenton had special reason not to forget the state of the country. The little town was crowded to the bursting point with sailors quartered there when the Delaware fleet was decommissioned in the closing weeks of 1777, and with a considerable body of cavalry. It had originally been Washington's intention to winter all his light horse in Trenton, but, when Gen. Pulaski arrived with them at the beginning of January he found the village unable to contain his entire force.

The community never fully repaired the damages suffered during the period of Hessian occupation; building materials and ^{workmen} were still scarce; and the provisions and fodder available in the vicinity had been almost exhausted by the needs of the heavy traffic in army supplies passing through the town in recent months.

Pulaski found himself obliged to scatter his men and horses over a territory extending as far away as Chatham; but enough of them remained in Trenton to brawl with the sailors, offer the inhabitants exhibitions of poor discipline and conduct. The provisions grudgingly furnished by tradesmen who displayed no optimism as to the value of the certificates they were given in payment.

Wash. Writings Vol. X. pp.
232-3, 234-5, 304, 302;

Magistrates of Trenton to W.
Jan 2-1778 in W. papers Vol. 64 - Pulaski to W

H. E. Lutterloh born 14-1778 to Lt. Col. John Laurens yesterday I received a letter from general Polasky...

Pulaski ✓

original:
Washington
Papers Vol. 65
Libt. Congr.

"he wishes also to have that famous Col. Kovatch who served all last war with such a distinction with his own corps of 2000 men under the King of Prussia who gave him the order of the Croix de Merite
- here are officers and men who served under him, and he could get men enough. Polasky wants him as his exercising master. He will be better for that than the French men we had (obviously) who did never serve in light troops."

össerint tisztos is Kármán voltak A-ban, azis K. alatt szolgáltak

Jan 9, 12, and 20, ibid. Vol. 65.
Major Benj. Tallmadge to W.
Feb. 9, ibid. Vol. 67.